RESEARCH FOR DEVELOPMENT
IMPACT NETWORK

A collaboration between the Australian Council for International Development and Australian universities

INTRODUCTION

The Research for Development Impact Network aims to increase opportunities for collaborations and partnerships which cross boundaries of geography, sector and discipline. Working together, we believe that our international development work can have greater positive impact and more sustainable outcomes for individuals, communities and our planet.

This document aims to provide a starting point for identifying potential in-country research partners and collaborators by identifying existing institutional and organisational research capacity in fifteen countries within the Pacific. This includes universities, think tanks, research organisations, development organisations, and regional development organisations. When such organisations undertake research for the whole Pacific region, they have been listed under 'Regional', even when they are located in one of the countries researched. Regional organisations which explicitly state development or research goals for the advancement of the Pacific region have also been listed.

In an effort to map existing cross sector linkages, known partnerships with Australian institutions have been listed. Contact has been made with these Australian institutions in an effort to ensure the validity of this information.

DISCLAIMER

While all efforts have been taken to ensure the accuracy of this information, it is recommended that readers undertake their own background research to find the most current information and contact points.

The information in this document is accurate, to the best of RDI Network's knowledge, as of September 2017.

If you have content or information to add to this resource, please be in touch:
